Emerging New Mexico Women Artists

In addition to our Scholarship Fund that awards grants to outstanding young women artists attending New Mexico public colleges and universities, NMC-NMWA showcases the work of emerging New Mexico women artists. Check out the work of these talented young women:

Dorielle Caimi, Albuquerque:

"In my work, I seek to illustrate an urgent state of mind. My current paintings explore the relationship between grace and angst that both plague and glorify the private worlds of young women. I am learning how these truths affect both our public perception and self-identity in a modern world."

Nina Elder, Santa Fe: "I examine the visual evidence of land use in the American West and its cycles of production, consumption, and waste. Through the vernacular of landscape painting, and using parking lots, bombing ranges, and junk heaps as my source material, I explore the delineation between land and landscape, beauty and banality."

Nina Tichava, Santa Fe: "My process-based paintings are as unplanned as possible. I search to convey a feeling of immediacy and to enhance the very physical and tactile elements of my work. From individually painted dots to drawn guidelines, the presence and feeling of my hand is essential and ultimately the central focus of the work."
